THOMPSON, Circuit Judge. In the years since Congress enacted the Puerto Rico Oversight, Management, and Economic Stability Act ("PROMESA"), 48 U.S.C. §§ 2101-2241, to address Puerto Rico's financial crisis by restructuring its debts, we've fielded many appeals arising out of all things PROMESA. It is no surprise that, after the court overseeing the Title III proceedings confirmed a plan of adjustment for the Commonwealth's debts, numerous individuals and organizations lodged various complaints as to sundry aspects of that plan and the order confirming it.

In this particular installment of the series of PROMESA cases before us,¹ Luis F. Pabón Bosques, Raúl Martínez Pérez, Elvin A. Rosado Morales, Carlos A. Rojas Rosario, and Rafael Torres Ramos ("Appellants") appeal from the Title III court's Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law and Confirmation Order, offering arguments aimed at obtaining certain retirement benefits to which Appellants believe they are entitled. Appellants' contentions have been rejected by the Financial Oversight and Management Board ("the Board"), Governor Pedro R. Pierluisi ("the Governor"), and the Puerto Rico Fiscal Agency and Financial Advisory Authority (referred to in the Commonwealth (and here) as "AAFAF"),² who offer

¹ This was one of several PROMESA matters argued to us on April 28, 2022. The cases were consolidated for briefing and oral argument pursuant to Rule 3(b)(2) of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure. This opinion resolves Appeal No. 22-1120 only.

² We'll sometimes refer to this group -- the Board, the Governor, and AAFAF -- collectively as "Appellees." And, for us arguments of the jurisdiction, standing, and mootness variety. As we'll explain, we dismiss Appellants' appeal for lack of appellate jurisdiction.

BACKGROUND

A hallmark of PROMESA cases is a complicated procedural history underpinning the case before us on appeal. So, too, is it here. But before we turn to that, it will be helpful to begin with a recent-history lesson on the universe of PROMESA and the years-long debt-restructuring proceedings that gave rise to this dispute.

In June 2016, Congress enacted PROMESA "to address an ongoing financial crisis in the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico." In re Fin. Oversight & Mgmt. Bd. for P.R., 872 F.3d 57, 59 (1st Cir. 2017) (citing Peaje Invs. LLC v. García-Padilla, 845 F.3d 505, 509 (1st Cir. 2017)).³ In doing so, Congress explained that "[a] comprehensive approach to fiscal, management, and structural problems and adjustments . . . is necessary, involving independent simplicity and because they filed a joint red brief, we often refer to the Governor and AAFAF, in their capacities as joint appellees, collectively as "AAFAF."

³ The interested reader can find more detail about the Commonwealth's debt spiral in PROMESA itself and in our precedent. See, e.g., 48 U.S.C. § 2194(m); In re Fin. Oversight & Mgmt. Bd. for P.R., 32 F.4th 67, 74 (1st Cir. 2022); Aurelius Inv., LLC v. Puerto Rico, 915 F.3d 838, 843-46 (1st Cir. 2019) (overruled on other grounds by Fin. Oversight & Mgmt. Bd. for P.R. v. Aurelius Inv., LLC, 140 S. Ct. 1649 (2020)).

oversight and a Federal statutory authority for the Government of Puerto Rico to restructure debts in a fair and orderly process." 48 U.S.C. § 2194(m)(4). To that end, Congress, through PROMESA, created the Board, see id. § 2121(b)(1), for the purpose of helping the Commonwealth "achieve fiscal responsibility and access to the capital markets," id. § 2121(a), and "to assist the Government of Puerto Rico in reforming its fiscal governance and support the implementation of potential debt restructuring," id. § 2194(n)(3).

"Among the numerous responsibilities assigned to the Board was the development of fiscal plans for the Commonwealth and its instrumentalities to 'provide a method to achieve fiscal responsibility and access to the capital markets.'" In re Fin. Oversight & Mgmt. Bd. for P.R., 32 F.4th 67, 74 (1st Cir. 2022) (quoting 48 U.S.C. § 2141(b)(1)). So PROMESA empowered the Board to develop, review, approve, and certify plans of fiscal adjustment. See 48 U.S.C. §§ 2141(c)-(e), 2142(c)(1). And, as relevant here, PROMESA authorizes the Board to commence quasi-bankruptcy proceedings to restructure the Commonwealth's debts under a part of the statute we refer to as "Title III." See id. § 2164(a); In re Fin. Oversight & Mgmt. Bd. for P.R., 872 F.3d at 59. "Title III authorized the Board to place the Commonwealth and its instrumentalities into bankruptcy proceedings and to develop a plan of adjustment for restructuring the Commonwealth's debts to wind down the bankruptcy in a manner that would 'reform[] . . .

fiscal governance.'" In re Fin. Oversight & Mgmt. Bd. for P.R., 32 F.4th at 75 (deletion and ellipsis in original) (quoting 48 U.S.C. § 2194(n)(3)); see also 48 U.S.C. § 2175. On May 3, 2017, the Board commenced Title III proceedings on behalf of the Commonwealth and some of its instrumentalities. See In re Fin. Oversight & Mgmt. Bd. for P.R., 872 F.3d at 60.

Fast forward a few years. On January 18, 2022, after a great deal of effort on the part of many people and entities, the Board presented the Plan of Adjustment (well, the Modified Eighth Amended version of the plan, which we'll refer to here as "the Plan") for the Commonwealth and two of its instrumentalities.

But let's break here for a moment before we dive into the Plan's negotiation and eventual confirmation because, in the lead-up to these headliner events, there were many other proceedings afoot. Indeed, amidst the Board's years-long efforts towards fashioning a workable plan of adjustment, the Board prudently kept a watchful eye on the Commonwealth's retirement-benefits scene. See generally 48 U.S.C. §§ 2128, 2141-2147. The Board's scrutiny of those matters, the course it charted to deal with them, and Appellants' interests converge here, forming the foundation for today's dispute.

Bear with us as we lay out the pertinent interlocking events, weaving together several different procedural storylines.

Back in August 2020, the Commonwealth's government enacted a series of retirement benefit laws: Puerto Rico Acts 80-2020 ("Act 80"), 81-2020 ("Act 81"), and 82-2020 ("Act 82").⁴ Appellants retired sometime after August 3, 2020,⁵ and thereafter sought payment of the retirement pensions to which they believed they were entitled under Act 81. But, as Appellants tell it, the Commonwealth's Employees Retirement System continued to dole out retirement benefits pursuant to Act 3, the previous (and less advantageous to retirees) law.⁶

⁴ Acts 80-82 permitted certain government employees to retire early and provided enhanced retirement benefits. Specifically, Act 80 was meant to equip the Commonwealth's government with a tool to manage the size of its workforce by providing early retirement benefits, while Act 82 would permit crediting sick leave and vacation time towards calculating retirement ages for teachers. Act 81, the focus of Appellants' arguments before us, "contemplate[d] the establishment of defined benefit pension rights for the benefit of certain Commonwealth emergency, law enforcement, and corrections personnel who enrolled in the Commonwealth public pension system before January 1, 2000." Act 81 "partially reverse[d] Act No. 3-2013, which froze pension accruals under the ERS defined benefit plan for participants who enrolled in the ERS pension system prior to January 1, 2000."

⁵ The appellate record does not bear out what employment positions the individual appellants held, but given their focus on Act 81 benefits, see supra note 4, it seems likely they fall into one or more of those categories. We need not dwell on this, though, as it has no bearing on our outcome today.

Now, given its efforts to keep a lid on the Commonwealth's fisc during the debt-restructuring process, the Board took issue with these new laws. In November 2020, the Commonwealth and the Board struck an accord not to implement the Acts until an agreement was reached relative to the Acts' financial viability in light of the ongoing debt-negotiation proceedings. On this record, it appears that a financial-viability agreement did not come to pass; nevertheless, the Commonwealth's legislature in November 2021 required the partial implementation of Act 80 (the early retirement package), which was followed by the Governor signing into law Joint Resolution 33 ("JR 33") on December 16, 2021. JR 33 required partial implementation of Act 80.

All the while, work on the plan of adjustment was ongoing. The various iterations of the plan shared some common features. Among them was a list of Commonwealth laws that would be preempted. As recently as November 2021, the Board endeavored to include Acts 80-82 on that preemption list. But AAFAF insisted that inclusion of these Acts among the preempted statutes was improper. The Title III court, on December 14, 2021, expressed doubt that there was a legally permissible basis upon which the plan could preempt Acts 80-82. See Order Regarding Certain Aspects of Motion for Confirmation of Modified Eighth Amended Title III Joint Plan of Adjustment of the Commonwealth of P.R., et al., at

5, In re Fin. Oversight & Mgmt. Bd. for P.R., No. 17-BK-3283 (D.P.R. Dec. 14, 2021), ECF 19517.

These assorted goings-on were on a collision course. Here's what happened next.

Given its failure to otherwise have the benefits Acts declared invalid through other PROMESA mechanisms, the Board commenced an adversary proceeding⁷ on December 20, 2021, against the Governor and AAFAF seeking to nullify and enjoin enforcement of the three Acts and JR 33, asserting, inter alia, that the Acts were significantly inconsistent with the Commonwealth's certified fiscal plan. See Fin. Oversight and Mgmt. Bd. for P.R. v. Hon. Pedro Pierluisi Urrutia, et al., Adv. Proc. No. 21-00119 in 17-BK-3283-LTS (D.P.R. Dec. 20, 2021). The Board explains that it was the Governor signing JR 33 (thereby requiring partial implementation of Act 80) that prompted it to file this adversary proceeding. The adversary proceeding's inception also came right on the heels of the Title III court's order expressing skepticism about including Acts 80-82 "in any list of preempted statutes."

Once the adversary proceeding was initiated, the Board, the Commonwealth government, and the Office of Management and ⁷ "[A]n adversary proceeding is a subsidiary lawsuit within the larger framework of a bankruptcy case." In re Fin. Oversight & Mgmt. Bd. for P.R., 872 F.3d at 63 (quoting Kowal v. Malkemus (In re Thompson), 965 F.2d 1136, 1140 (1st Cir. 1992)); see also Fed. R. Bankr. P. 7001 (which 48 U.S.C. § 2170 says shall apply to PROMESA cases).

Budget engaged in negotiations, and one week after the suit was filed, they executed a settlement stipulation ("the Stipulation") to resolve the benefits controversy -- subject to court approval. In the Stipulation, the parties agreed that Acts 80-82, as well as JR 33, were "invalidate[d] . . . pursuant to PROMESA, including as significantly inconsistent with the [relevant] certified fiscal plan," except as otherwise provided in the Stipulation.⁸ A day later, on December 28, 2021, the Title III court approved and so-ordered the Stipulation and entered final judgment ("the Approval Order"), i.e., the Title III judge signed her name to the "SO ORDERED" line in the bottom corner of the Stipulation, thereby creating the Approval Order.

In the course of the one week the adversary proceeding was pending, and once the Stipulation was entered and judicially

⁸ On the topic of Act 81 (the one that would apply to Appellants, remember, though Appellants do tend to discuss the Acts as a group, too), the Stipulation said:

The parties shall endeavor to reach an agreement, within 60 days of the date of this agreement on a means to provide enhanced retirement benefits to police officers consistent with the Commonwealth's certified fiscal plan and currently proposed plan of adjustment. If the parties reach an agreement, the Oversight Board shall provide the necessary fiscal plan and budgetary approvals or certifications required by PROMESA.

The Stipulation also stated that "[t]he Court's approval or 'SO ORDERING' of this agreement shall invalidate JR 33 and Acts 80, 81, and 82 pursuant to PROMESA, including as significantly inconsistent with the certified fiscal plan, as of the enactment date," except as otherwise provided in the Stipulation.

sanctioned, Appellants never sought to intervene, object to, or otherwise participate in the proceeding, nor did they immediately appeal the adversary proceeding's outcome.

That takes us back to the Plan and its confirmation. On January 18, 2022, an "Order and Judgment Confirming Modified Eighth Amended Title III Joint Plan of Adjustment of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Employees Retirement System of the Government of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and the Puerto Rico Public Buildings Authority" (for short, "the Confirmation Order") was (at long last) entered by the Title III court. Contemporaneously, the Title III court issued its "Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law in Connection with" the Confirmation Order (we'll call this "the FF/CL"). Appellants did not file an objection to the Plan or the Confirmation Order in the Title III court.

Jumping backwards for a moment and as relevant to this appeal, recall that, before the adversary proceeding took place, the Board had requested a ruling during the protracted plan of adjustment proceedings that PROMESA preempts Acts 80-82. Ultimately, in its FF/CL, the Title III court did not offer such a ruling. That is so because, as the court said in the FF/CL, any question concerning the preemption of Acts 80-82 "ha[d] been mooted by the Court's approval of the [Stipulation]" -- the Stipulation, the court wrote, "resolved litigation concerning the validity of [the] Acts" and invalidated the Acts on the ground they were "significantly inconsistent with the relevant certified fiscal plan."⁹

That brings us to the present day and the instant appeal, which protests both the FF/CL and Confirmation Order as they relate to the denial of the more favorable retirement benefits.

DISCUSSION

Here, Appellants offer a gallimaufry of arguments regarding the FF/CL and Confirmation Order and the adversary proceeding's Stipulation and eventual Approval Order and why the Title III judge got it all wrong. But amidst the many complex issues this appeal raises, from our perch, this comes down to, as Appellees point out, appellate jurisdiction.

In tackling the appellate jurisdiction inquiry, we balance our own obligation to inquire into our jurisdiction, see Watchtower Bible & Tract Soc'y of N.Y., Inc. v. Colombani, 712 F.3d 6, 10 (1st Cir. 2013) (observing that this court "must appraise [its] own authority to hear and determine particular cases" (quoting Cusumano v. Microsoft Corp., 162 F.3d 708, 712 (1st Cir. 1998))); id. at 10 n.3 (noting that this court "would have an obligation to pursue the jurisdictional inquiry even if

[one side] acquiesced in the [other side's] claim of jurisdiction"); Whitfield v. Mun. of Fajardo, 564 F.3d 40, 44 (1st Cir. 2009) ("[F]ederal courts have an omnipresent duty to take notice of jurisdictional defects, on their own initiative if necessary."), with the fact that it is Appellants' burden to show this court has appellate jurisdiction, see U.S. Fid. & Guar. Co. v. Arch Ins. Co., 578 F.3d 45, 55 (1st Cir. 2009) (stating that the party invoking appellate jurisdiction bears the burden of establishing that it exists). And when appellate jurisdiction has been called into question, as it has by the Board and AAFAF here, this court will generally consider only the rationales offered by the party invoking the court's jurisdiction. See, e.g., Micro Signal Research, Inc. v. Otus, 417 F.3d 28, 34 (1st Cir. 2005) ("It is up to defendants to show that we have jurisdiction over their appeal of the attachments; whether or not a stronger case for jurisdiction could have been made, it has not been provided here."); Campbell v. Gen. Dynamics Gov't Sys. Corp., 407 F.3d 546, 551 (1st Cir. 2005) (declining to assert appellate jurisdiction over an order when a party "ha[d] failed to identify a valid jurisdictional hook on which [the court] might hang immediate review of" it).¹⁰

¹⁰ Both the Board and AAFAF squarely focused their responsive arguments in this matter on the various reasons why Appellants could not pull off what they were trying to do on appeal, but lack of appellate jurisdiction was chief among those reasons. After Appellants' notice of appeal is relevant to our jurisdictional inquiry. The Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure instruct that a notice of appeal must "designate the judgment -- or the appealable order -- from which the appeal is taken." Fed. R. App. P. 3(c)(1)(B). For our part, "[w]e can exercise jurisdiction over those orders 'fairly raised within th[e] notices.'" Gonpo v. Sonam's Stonewalls & Art, LLC, 41 F.4th 1, 9 (1st Cir. 2022) (second alteration in original) (quoting Constructora Andrade Gutiérrez, S.A. v. Am. Int'l Ins. Co., 467 F.3d 38, 44-45 (1st Cir. 2006)).

In their notice of appeal, Appellants cite to the entry of the FF/CL and Confirmation Order as the final decisions from which they are appealing. And before us, in the jurisdictional section of their brief, Appellants anchor jurisdiction, without elaboration, on 28 U.S.C. § 1291, which generally gives the courts of appeals jurisdiction over final decisions of the district courts. Considering both proffers, and after a careful review of our jurisdiction was questioned, Appellants chose not to file a reply brief addressing these concerns. While Appellants are not required to file a reply brief, see Fed. R. App. P. 28(c) ("The appellant may file a brief in reply to the appellee's brief."), we reiterate what we've made clear before. When appellate jurisdiction has been called into question, we generally consider only the rationales offered by the party invoking the court's jurisdiction. See, e.g., Otus, 417 F.3d at 34.

Incidentally, the same goes for the other dispositive, threshold hurdles (standing and mootness) argued by AAFAF and the Board in their red briefs -- Appellants made no response to those arguments either.

the arguments presented here, we best frame the crux of the jurisdictional quandary like this: Did Appellants in fact appeal, and appeal in a timely fashion, the court order which is the basis of their grievance, to wit, the Approval Order that would allow us to exercise jurisdiction over those particular claims?

From what we can tell, Appellants suggest they have done so and seem to be making two primary arguments relevant to our jurisdictional determination. First, Appellants allude to the idea that the FF/CL and Confirmation Order specifically "[held] that [Acts 80-82] are preempted by PROMESA," in that the adversary proceeding's Approval Order (which, upon its entry, invalidated the Acts "pursuant to PROMESA, including as significantly inconsistent with the certified fiscal plan") got incorporated into the FF/CL and Confirmation Order. Appellants imply this incorporation occurred when the Title III court's FF/CL made mention of the Approval Order.¹¹ Second, they assert a preemption

¹¹ A quick aside. We say "Appellants allude to the idea" and "Appellants imply" because we're mindful that Appellants never affirmatively contend any such incorporation by reference actually happened, instead simply intimating the idea in their opening brief and then promoting a theory of incorporation by reference at oral argument and in a post-argument submission. In their Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 28(j) letter, Appellants point to a nonbinding case about the collateral order doctrine and appeals of interlocutory decisions before concluding "the Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law and Confirmation Order directly incorporate the Court Order of the Adversary Proceeding." This "incorporation" mention is worth flagging here as the only on-paper, explicit "incorporation" notation we spy in Appellants' submissions. (But

order entered because, as they tell it, the Approval Order by operation of law got merged into the appealed-from FF/CL and Confirmation Order for purposes of appeal. Seemingly operating from the supposition that the Approval Order's substance is part and parcel of the FF/CL and Confirmation Order which were timely appealed, Appellants expend the bulk of their appellate energy on their endgame argument as to why the foundational Stipulation and resulting Approval Order were fatally flawed as a matter of Puerto Rico contract law, meaning the Title III court erred in approving it, the adversary proceeding should be reopened, and the dispute about the validity of Acts 80-82 should be resurrected.¹²

The Board and AAFAF urge us to reject all of this, contending that we should dismiss the appeal because Appellants' case is plagued by various insurmountable jurisdictional, standing, and mootness problems.¹³ Crucially, Appellees maintain it goes more to merger doctrine, not incorporation by reference. And we'll get into that shortly.)

Accordingly, although this incorporation argument is quite thinly presented, we close the loop on this notion as part of our jurisdictional examination.

¹³ As is relevant to the instant matter, AmeriNational Community Services, LLC, as servicer for the GDB Debt Recovery

that neither the Title III court's FF/CL nor its Confirmation Order in any way held Acts 80-82 were preempted by PROMESA because the adversary proceeding's Stipulation and ensuing Approval Order had already mooted the issue.¹⁴ And because the adversary proceeding, though related, was completely separate from the main Title III case, and because no timely appeal of that proceeding's Approval Order followed, no appellate jurisdiction lies with us from that order.¹⁵

We consider the theories advanced in support of jurisdiction in turn.

Incorporation

First up is incorporation, which we dispatch with the same brevity as it was handed to us by Appellants. We start with Authority and Cantor-Katz Collateral Monitor LLC join the Board's brief as to the arguments it advances to rebut Appellants' appellate contentions. Similarly, AAFAF adopts the Board's Pabón-related arguments.

¹⁴ The Board and AAFAF also say this means Appellants lack standing because no injury in fact exists that is fairly traceable to the FF/CL and Confirmation Order, and there is no injury that could be redressed by a favorable decision from this court. Because we dispose of this matter on appellate-jurisdiction grounds, not standing, we need say no more on standing or mootness. See, e.g., Brito v. Garland, 22 F.4th 240, 255 (1st Cir. 2021) ("Ultimately, we need not resolve the standing question, for 'a federal court has leeway to choose among threshold grounds for denying audience to a case on the merits.'" (quoting Sinochem Int'l Co. v. Malaysia Int'l Shipping Corp., 549 U.S. 422, 431 (2007))).

¹⁵ Appellees do not invoke equitable mootness as a reason to dismiss this appeal. See United Sur. & Indem. Co. v. López-Muñoz (In re López-Muñoz), 983 F.3d 69, 72 (1st Cir. 2020) (examining the policy underlying and test for finding equitable mootness).

the language of the FF/CL and Confirmation Order themselves. The FF/CL explained that,

[t]hrough modifications to the proposed Plan and related documents, the Oversight Board previously requested judicial acknowledgement that [Acts 80-82] are preempted by PROMESA. That request has been mooted by the Court's approval of the Stipulation and [Approval Order], pursuant to which the Puerto Rico Fiscal Agency and Financial Advisory Authority, the Office of Management and Budget, and the Honorable Pedro Pierluisi Urrutia, the Governor of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, resolved litigation concerning the validity of [Acts 80-82] . . . and agreed that they are significantly inconsistent with the relevant certified fiscal plan.

As Appellees contend, it is nose to face plain from this language that the FF/CL did not directly hold that Acts 80-82 are preempted by PROMESA, nor did it directly effect an invalidation of the Acts; rather, as the Title III court recognized, it is the Approval Order which did that deed (instructing that Acts 80-82 (and JR 33) were "invalidate[d] . . . pursuant to PROMESA, including as significantly inconsistent with the [relevant] certified fiscal plan"). All the FF/CL observes is an acknowledgment that the Board's prior request to include Acts 80-82 on the schedule of preempted laws had already been resolved and thus mooted.

But, as we interpret Appellants' argument to be, did the FF/CL's mere reference to the Stipulation and Approval Order constitute an incorporation by reference of the invalidation? Before answering, let's talk about the legal concept of incorporation.

Generally speaking, incorporation by reference is "[a] method of making a secondary document part of a primary document by including in the primary document a statement that the secondary document should be treated as if it were contained within the primary one." Incorporation by reference, Black's Law Dictionary (11th ed. 2019). In a situation loosely analogous to this one relative to this particular incorporation idea, a panel of this court explained that a "passing reference to [a] settlement agreement" -- "the judgment dismissing the case said both that '[d]efendants shall pay plaintiff the sum of $50,000' and that payment shall be made 'as per the terms of the settlement agreement'" -- "is not enough to incorporate its terms into [a] judgment." Colón-Torres v. Negrón-Fernández, 997 F.3d 63, 70 (1st Cir. 2021); see also F.A.C., Inc. v. Cooperativa de Seguros de Vida de P.R., 449 F.3d 185, 190 (1st Cir. 2006) (explaining that a judgment's "bare reference" to a settlement agreement (that "the parties ha[d] come to a settlement agreement") was not enough to incorporate the settlement's terms into that judgment, but a later judgment that set forth (inter alia) the court's understanding of the settlement's main terms did constitute an incorporation of the settlement's terms).

With this in mind, we consider again the language the Title III court deployed. True, the FF/CL makes mention of the Approval Order, just as the Colón-Torres judgment made mention of the settlement agreement. But the Approval Order gets a shout-out in the FF/CL simply for its existence, not because the FF/CL is adopting a preemption take on Acts 80-82. The FF/CL solely stated that the Board's please-include-Acts-80-82-on-the-preemption-list request was moot. This passing reference to the Approval Order -- offered to explain why the Title III court in its FF/CL wouldn't be touching on the validity of Acts 80-82 -- does not amount to an FF/CL incorporation of the Approval Order's invalidation of the Acts.

And, importantly for us, Appellants offer us no legal authority or persuasive argument that would compel us, as a matter of law, to conclude otherwise. Thus, this argument is a no-go as a jurisdictional hook.¹⁶

Merger

That leaves merger, which appears to be the major thrust of Appellants' jurisdictional asseveration. As far as words and ¹⁶ To be clear -- because this case is a procedural hot mess -- no one disputes that Appellants' appeal from the entry of the FF/CL and Confirmation Order was timely, and no one disputes that we have jurisdiction to review those orders. But, as we've endeavored to explicate as best we can based on the arguments as they were presented to us, that's not the issue here. Appellants latch onto the FF/CL's mention of Acts 80-82 to seek to use these orders as a vehicle to assail what the Approval Order actually did, and their brief reflects as much.

Even if we were to disregard the complete picture and thrust of Appellants' arguments, limiting our framing of Appellants' arguments to an attack on the FF/CL and Confirmation Order based on Appellants' belief that they wrongly concluded the Acts were preempted by PROMESA, that construction suffers the same fatal principles go, merger and incorporation sound deceptively similar. Here, though, they mean different things. We've just rejected the idea that the FF/CL and Confirmation Order incorporated the adversary proceeding's Approval Order's invalidation of the Acts. Merger, for appellate jurisdiction purposes, operates a little differently. Merger here is about whether the Approval Order itself is before us on appeal. We explain.

Rule 3 of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure explicates that "[t]he notice of appeal encompasses all orders that, for purposes of appeal, merge into the designated judgment or appealable order," and instructs that "[i]t is not necessary to designate those orders in the notice of appeal." Fed. R. App. P. 3(c)(4); but see Fed. R. App. P. 3, advisory committee's notes to the 2021 amendment (cautioning that the amendment "does not attempt to codify the merger principle but instead leaves its details to case law").

Appellants, in accordance with Rule 3's guidance, probably banked on the Approval Order being merged into the FF/CL and Confirmation Order, thinking they were timely appealing the Approval Order by appealing the FF/CL and Confirmation Order. This comes across in the (unsupported, largely undeveloped) assumptions flaw laid out in our above jurisdictional analysis: The orders did not offer any such preemption "holding" as Appellants insist it did, instead stating only that the Board's request to include Acts 80-82 on the preemption schedule was moot.

they make in their opening brief and also in that Appellants' counsel represented at oral argument that the Confirmation Order is a final order pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291, and that Appellants didn't try to intervene in or appeal from the adversary proceeding because they were "just waiting for the Confirmation Order." This merger-based assumption is most obviously showcased in Appellants' post-argument submission, wherein they rely on In re Peachtree Lane Assocs., Ltd., 188 B.R. 815, 822 (N.D. Ill. 1995), to support the notion that the Approval Order is before us on appeal because "[i]t is well established . . . that 'when the appellant appeals the final judgment, that judgment necessarily incorporates all earlier interlocutory decisions' and '[b]y referring to the final order the [appellants] present the whole case to us on appeal.'" Id. (the first two alterations are our own) (quoting Glass v. Dachel, 2 F.3d 733, 738 (7th Cir. 1993)).

Here's the thing about Appellants' merger theory, though: If the adversary proceeding's Approval Order did not merge into the FF/CL and/or Confirmation Order (the final orders designated in the notice of appeal), then the Approval Order, which had become final and immediately appealable pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)¹⁷ after its entry, is not properly before us on appeal.

¹⁷ As pertinent here, the statutory text explains that "[t]he district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to hear appeals from final judgments, orders, and decrees," 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)(1), and "[t]he courts of appeals shall have jurisdiction

We now turn to explaining why all of this is so (based on the separateness of the adversary proceeding and main bankruptcy case as well as principles of finality), and why the end result is that Appellants' merger concept does not pan out as a jurisdiction-conferring mechanism for this appeal.

Remember that, as a matter of procedure here, the Approval Order was the result of the adversary proceeding, whereas the FF/CL and Confirmation Order arose out of the main bankruptcy case. For appellate-procedure purposes, this separation is significant. Because if today's matter had been a typical civil case involving an earlier order being swept up into an appeal by virtue of a general notice of appeal from the same case's final order, Appellants might've been onto something with their merger idea. See Fed. R. App. P. 3(c)(4); see also In re Saco Loc. Dev. Corp. (In re Saco), 711 F.2d 441, 443-44 (1st Cir. 1983) (contrasting traditional civil actions with bankruptcy cases with respect to their structure and how finality can arise). But the structure of bankruptcy matters, as we'll untangle, is a horse of a different color, and this case and its posture are of appeals from all final decisions, judgments, orders, and decrees entered under subsections (a) and (b) of this section," id. § 158(d)(1).

distinguishable from the normal civil litigation case in a handful of important ways.¹⁸

"Traditionally, every civil action in a federal court has been viewed as a 'single judicial unit,' from which only one appeal would lie." In re Saco, 711 F.2d at 443 (quoting 6 J. Moore, W. Taggart & J. Wicker, Moore's Federal Practice ¶ 54.19 (1982)). "Ordinarily, putting aside the effect of Fed. R. Civ. P. 54(b), an action remains a 'single judicial unit' even when it contains multiple claims and multiple parties." Id. (citations omitted).

This is not what we have in the case before us.

Unlike a typical civil case, bankruptcy cases can involve a vast number of litigants and interested parties interspersed throughout the bankruptcy case and its various subsidiary, independent proceedings. Indeed, in the world of bankruptcy, even "the word 'case' has a specialized meaning." In re Fin. Oversight & Mgmt. Bd. for P.R., 872 F.3d 57, 60 n.2 (1st Cir. 2017). Specifically, "[a] bankruptcy case is what is commenced by the filing of a petition for bankruptcy relief" -- "the whole ball of wax." Id. (quoting 7 Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 1109.04[1][a][i] (Alan N. Resnick & Henry J. Sommer eds., 16th ed. 2016) [hereinafter Collier]). A "'proceeding,' by contrast, refers to 'any one of the myriad discrete judicial proceedings within a case,'" so a "'case' encompasses all of the discrete proceedings that follow the filing of a petition for bankruptcy relief, including adversary proceedings." Id. (quoting 7 Collier ¶ 1109.04[1][a][i]).

An adversary proceeding generally constitutes "a discrete procedural unit within the embracive bankruptcy case." Ritzen Grp., Inc. v. Jackson Masonry, LLC (Ritzen), 140 S. Ct. 582, 586 (2020) ("A bankruptcy case encompasses numerous 'individual controversies, many of which would exist as stand-alone lawsuits but for the bankrupt status of the debtor.'" (quoting Bullard v. Blue Hills Bank, 575 U.S. 496, 501 (2015))); id. at 589 (explaining that "a discrete dispute" within the bankruptcy is "an independent 'proceeding' within the meaning of 28 U.S.C. § 158(a)" (quoting Bullard, 575 U.S. at 502-05)); see also In re Saco, 711 F.2d at 445-46.

And the meaningfulness of the difference between adversary proceedings and main bankruptcy cases for purposes of appeal has been strung together nicely by a sister circuit: "[A] 'notice of appeal in a main bankruptcy proceeding' cannot 'serve as a notice of appeal in a related adversary proceeding.'" In re Cleveland Imaging & Surgical Hosp., L.L.C. (In re Cleveland Imaging), 26 F.4th 285, 293 (5th Cir. 2022) (quoting Dorsey v. U.S. Dep't of Educ. (In re Dorsey), 870 F.3d 359, 362 (5th Cir. 2017) (cleaned up)). "Instead, the 'main bankruptcy case and adversary proceeding must be treated as distinct for the purpose of appeal.'" Id. (quoting In re Dorsey, 870 F.3d at 363); see also Dietrich v. Tiernan (In re Dietrich), 490 Fed. App'x 802, 804 (6th Cir. 2012) (unpublished) (elaborating that the main bankruptcy case and adversary proceeding "have separate docket numbers, separate issues, and separate parties"). "After all, 'adversary proceedings are discrete judicial units,'" In re Cleveland Imaging, 26 F.4th at 293 (quoting In re Dorsey, 870 F.3d at 362) -- "[r]efusing to treat a notice of appeal in the main case as a notice of appeal in the adversary case makes sense [since] adversary proceedings are discrete judicial units," In re Dorsey, 870 F.3d at 363. And because the In re Cleveland Imaging appellants hadn't "file[d] a notice of appeal on the adversary docket, their notice didn't embrace the dismissal of their adversary proceeding," and the court lacked jurisdiction. 26 F.4th at 293.

This is where the separateness of the adversary proceeding from the main bankruptcy case dovetails with important finality principles, all of which combine to guide our analysis. Indeed, just because an adversary proceeding falls under the umbrella of the bankruptcy does not mean a case-closing order that finally resolves an adversary proceeding is, for purposes of appeal, automatically merged with an order that issues in "the whole ball of wax" bankruptcy case such that a timely appeal of a larger-bankruptcy-case final order (the FF/CL and Confirmation Order) would allow an appellant to contest the adversary proceeding's final order (the Approval Order).

Recall that § 158(d) gives litigants a right of appeal to the courts of appeals from all "final decisions, judgments, orders [or] decrees entered" by district courts in bankruptcy cases. 28 U.S.C. § 158(d) (emphasis added). In other words, we don't have jurisdiction unless the appealed-from decision is, in fact, final, but when it is final, our jurisdiction does attach if an appeal to us is properly noticed. And while "[i]t is often difficult to determine what constitutes a 'final' judgment or order under section 158(d) [, t]here is somewhat less difficulty in doing so in an adversary proceeding" because "the finality determination in such proceedings 'closely resembles [that] in an ordinary case [between the parties] in a district court.'" Quiros Lopez v. Unanue Casal (In re Unanue Casal), 998 F.2d 28, 31 (1st Cir. 1993) (quoting Estancias La Ponderosa Dev. Corp. v. Harrington (In re Harrington), 992 F.2d 3, 6 n.3 (1st Cir. 1993)). "Accordingly, a district court order in an adversary proceeding is not appealable as of right under section 158(d) unless it ends the entire adversary proceeding on the merits and leaves nothing for the court to do but enter the judgment." Id. (internal quotation marks and citation omitted); see also In re González, 795 F.3d 288, 291 (1st Cir. 2015) (instructing that, "within each discrete adversary proceeding in a bankruptcy, 'ordinary concepts of finality apply,' meaning that 'orders in which the merits are not determined' are generally not final" (quoting 1 Collier ¶ 5.08[1][b], [5])).

Indeed, important to our work today, "Congress has long provided that orders in bankruptcy cases may be immediately appealed if they finally dispose of discrete disputes within the larger case -- and in particular, it has long provided that orders finally settling creditors' claims are separately appealable." In re Saco, 711 F.2d at 444 (emphasis in original); id. at 445-46 (explaining that, "given a longstanding Congressional policy of appealability, an uninterrupted tradition of judicial interpretation in which courts have viewed a 'proceeding' within a bankruptcy case as the relevant 'judicial unit' for purposes of finality, and a legislative history that is consistent with this tradition, we conclude that a 'final judgment, order, or decree' under 28 U.S.C. § 1293(b) includes an order that conclusively determines a separable dispute over a creditor's claim or priority").¹⁹ See also Perry v. First Citizens Fed. Credit Union (In re Perry), 391 F.3d 282, 285 (1st Cir. 2004) ("To be final, a bankruptcy order need not resolve all of the issues in the proceeding, but it must finally dispose of all the issues pertaining to a discrete dispute within the larger proceeding."); In re Am. Colonial Broad. Corp., 758 F.2d 794, 801 (1st Cir. 1985) (reasoning that "[a] bankruptcy order need not dispose of all aspects of a case in order to be final; an order which disposes of a 'discrete dispute within the larger case' will be considered final and appealable" as long as it "'conclusively determine[s]' the dispute" (quoting In re Saco, 711 F.2d at 444, 445-46)).

Our takeaway is this: Putting it all together means that we ask ourselves, on a case-by-case basis, whether an adversary proceeding, upon its conclusion, has the sufficient indicia of distinction (from the primary bankruptcy proceeding) and finality to be immediately appealable. See, e.g., Ritzen, 140

¹⁹ We are aware that In re Saco dealt with 28 U.S.C. § 158(d)'s predecessor, § 1293(b), but that is a distinction without meaning -- the leading bankruptcy treatise and our own precedent have indicated that the statutes have been accorded the same meaning. See, e.g., Perry v. First Citizens Fed. Credit Union (In re Perry), 391 F.3d 282, 285 (1st Cir. 2004) (citing Giles World Mktg., Inc. v. Boekamp Mfg., Inc., 787 F.2d 746, 748 n.2 (1st Cir. 1986)); 1 Collier ¶ 5.07.

That every resolved adversary proceeding does not merge into an appeal from a final plan makes sense as a policy matter, too. Pandemonium would result if litigants could get automatic merger-principle appellate review of any number of earlier, final adversary proceeding orders and judgments simply by appealing a final order in the main bankruptcy case. As noted earlier, these bankruptcy cases involve multitudes of claimants, creditors, interested parties, claims, interests, and proceedings, sometimes taking years to untangle and ultimately resolve.²⁰ Case in point:

²⁰ In general, and as is clear from our work to this point, bankruptcy cases have an impressive knack for complicating appellate review. Indeed, "bankruptcy litigation in many instances is unlike ordinary civil litigation" -- as is certainly the case here and in PROMESA generally, "bankruptcy litigation frequently involves and affects the interest of entities that are frequently not formally parties to a particular adversary proceeding or contested matter." 1 Collier ¶ 5.07. "It might be said that all of the creditors and the debtor or trustee are parties to every order entered in a bankruptcy case, but that does not help to determine what parties have standing to take an appeal. Procedural chaos would result from a rule that all parties who are involved directly, indirectly, or tangentially in the case have the power to appeal any order entered by a bankruptcy judge." Id. But once again, we repeat, our analysis allows us to avoid any standing problem.

the Commonwealth's bankruptcy case. So it tracks that it should not work this way. See, e.g., Ritzén, 140 S. Ct. at 586-87 ("It is thus common for bankruptcy courts to resolve discrete controversies definitively while the umbrella bankruptcy case remains pending."). This applies with full force in today's case.

Here, it is clear that the adversary proceeding was separate from the bankruptcy case and upon entry of the Approval Order became final and immediately appealable under § 158(d). The Approval Order conclusively resolved the entire benefits dispute, including issues as to what relief would be granted, closed the adversary proceeding, and even dismissed the Board's complaint with prejudice. See In re González, 795 F.3d at 291; In re Perry, 391 F.3d at 285; In re Unanue Casal, 998 F.2d at 31; In re Am. Colonial Broad. Corp., 758 F.2d at 801; In re Saco, 711 F.2d at 444. And importantly, once it became clear that no party sought to appeal the adversary proceeding's final determinations, it brought certainty and predictability to the Title III proceedings that there would be additional monies in the Commonwealth's coffers available for distribution down the road. Truth be told, Appellants simply have not attempted to confront the important distinction between the adversary proceeding and the main bankruptcy case or explain why the Approval Order did not finally resolve the adversary proceeding, thus making it appealable.²¹

Given the finality doctrine as understood within the context of a bankruptcy proceeding, and in light of our own precedent and the persuasive reasoning out of our sibling circuits, we conclude here that on the facts of this case, and contrary to Appellants' apparent, assumed, or aspirational take on the interplay of these legal considerations, the adversary proceeding's Approval Order, based on the merger doctrine, cannot be construed as part of the main bankruptcy case's FF/CL and/or Confirmation Order. See generally Ritzen, 140 S. Ct. at 587 (urging that immediate appeal of "discrete, controversy-resolving decisions" in adversary proceedings makes good sense because delaying such appeals "would long postpone appellate review of fully adjudicated disputes" and could lead to an inefficient need to "unravel later adjudications rendered in reliance on an earlier decision"); In re Perry, 391 F.3d at 285 (finding a "bankruptcy court's order finally dispose[d] of all the material issues pertaining to this discrete dispute and [was], therefore, final and appealable"); In re Saco, 711 F.2d at 444 (explaining that

"orders in bankruptcy cases may be immediately appealed if they finally dispose of discrete disputes within the larger case" (emphasis in original)); see also In re Dorsey, 870 F.3d at 362-63 ("An adversary proceeding is thus part of the bankruptcy but it is not the bankruptcy case itself, as illustrated by the fact that the dismissal of an adversary proceeding is an appealable final order even though the bankruptcy case continues.") (quoting United States v. Peel, 595 F.3d 763, 768-69 (7th Cir. 2010)); Prof'l. Ins. Mgmt. v. Ohio Sec. Ins. Co. (In re Pro. Ins. Mgmt.), 285 F.3d 268, 281 (3d Cir. 2002) (explaining that "a bankruptcy court order ending a separate adversary proceeding is appealable as a final order even though that order does not conclude the entire bankruptcy case" (quoting Smith v. Revie (In re Moody), 817 F.2d 365, 367-68 (5th Cir. 1987))).²²

All this in turn means the appeal clock started ticking when the Approval Order was entered. See 28 U.S.C. § 158(d); Fed. R. App. P. 4(a)(1)(A) (requiring that a Rule 3 notice of appeal be filed "within 30 days after entry of the judgment or order appealed from"); Fed. R. App. P. 6. Of import to us, Appellants have not suggested anything that would indicate they could not have appealed the Approval Order in the normal course.²³ Bottom line, due to Appellants' failure to timely appeal the Order arising out of the adversary proceeding, we lack jurisdiction. See In re Cleveland Imaging, 26 F.4th at 293; In re Dorsey, 870 F.3d at 362.

A coda before departing. We are mindful that today's analysis is, of course, cast against the unique backdrop of PROMESA. While bankruptcy law generally places a premium on the need for prompt, orderly action and the efficiency of proceedings, PROMESA builds on that: PROMESA forthrightly acknowledges the Commonwealth's dire fiscal emergency and draws on it to lay out specific tools and various expediting procedures in an effort to keep all PROMESA goings-on in harmony with the ultimate goal of helping the Commonwealth achieve financial stability by efficiently restructuring its debts. See, e.g., Mun. of San Juan v. Puerto Rico, 919 F.3d 565, 577 (1st Cir. 2019) (discussing the policy goal of reorganization proceeding efficiently and applying to PROMESA the purposes of the Bankruptcy Code); see also, e.g., 48 U.S.C. § 2194(m)(4) (underscoring, in the stay context, the need for "orderly process" to restructure debts as a reason to take "[a] comprehensive approach to [the Commonwealth's] fiscal, management, and structural problems"); id. § 2194(n)(1) (discussing the "immediate existing and imminent crisis" of the Commonwealth's debt and the need to focus on achieving financial stability and returning to economic growth in the Commonwealth). The PROMESA backdrop makes it all the more apparent that Appellants -- who had taken other steps to lodge and pursue their grievances (in the Court of First Instance, remember), and who were well aware of both the adversary proceeding and the years-long effort to arrive at a final plan that was chugging right along -- should have taken the most expeditious route by immediately appealing the adversary proceeding's final, dispute-resolving Approval Order rather than waiting for the Confirmation Order to enter and appealing in the main bankruptcy case.

CONCLUSION

The upshot -- we dismiss Appellants' appeal for lack of appellate jurisdiction. Each party shall bear their own costs.
